

Tough issue to get teens thinking about

During the Gates and Clinton conversation, audience members were encouraged to write questions on a card that a moderator would then get them to answer:

► Shamin Mohamed, a young Toronto teenager who runs a website called www.letsstopaid-s.org, asked both to comment on AIDS and young people.

Gates said: "It's a very tough problem to get AIDS to be the top issue for young people to think about."

Clinton said: "If you can build a sense of solidarity so young people could work together and advocate, it would make a big difference."

► Clinton was asked about his record as U.S. president when it came to AIDS funding. "I did make a lot of mistakes when I was president but that wasn't one of them."

► Another audience member asked Clinton if he would be interested in running for prime minister of Canada. Both the audience and Clinton laughed. Clinton didn't directly answer but said he has been to Canada so many times and it has been so good to him he should really check if he owes any taxes.
